Re: General James Mitchell Varnum House

Speaking on my own behalf and not that of any organization, I would like to say that the Varnum house has great historical value.

As a mostly intact house from the revolutionary war period, it can house those historical artifacts that benefit from being presented in the environment in which they were originally used.

It's a great venue for any event related to the colonial era. It enhances one's experience to stand in the place where history happened and feel the resonance of long ago events.

Thank you,
Theo Aschman
